REDWING MARSH

Broad gray-blue wings circled in narrowing arcs
over the pea-green pond, golden eyes searching for one perfect cove
rich with silver fish,
then gently descending,
surveying aquascape,
celebrating a
new found summer home.

Canada families
sail by, greetings exchanged with a new neighbor.
Mallards must be told, of course, but they are mostly busy.
And reedy fringes are peacefully singing.

Then
Out of the north come two more great blue pairs circling the first
who rise to meet them
but not to greet them,
rather to claim what is theirs.

Now the peace is over.
Singers flare to challenge,
small black tenors,
red chevrons on their wings:
"Surely you can read the signs.
This is Redwing Marsh.
There is no blue-wing landing here.
Be off. Be off. And come no more to threaten our tranquility."
And in a rush of crimson, gold and black,
the big blue wings are beaten back.
